

THE MILLION DOLLAR QUESTION

by Edward Schwartz, Ph.D.

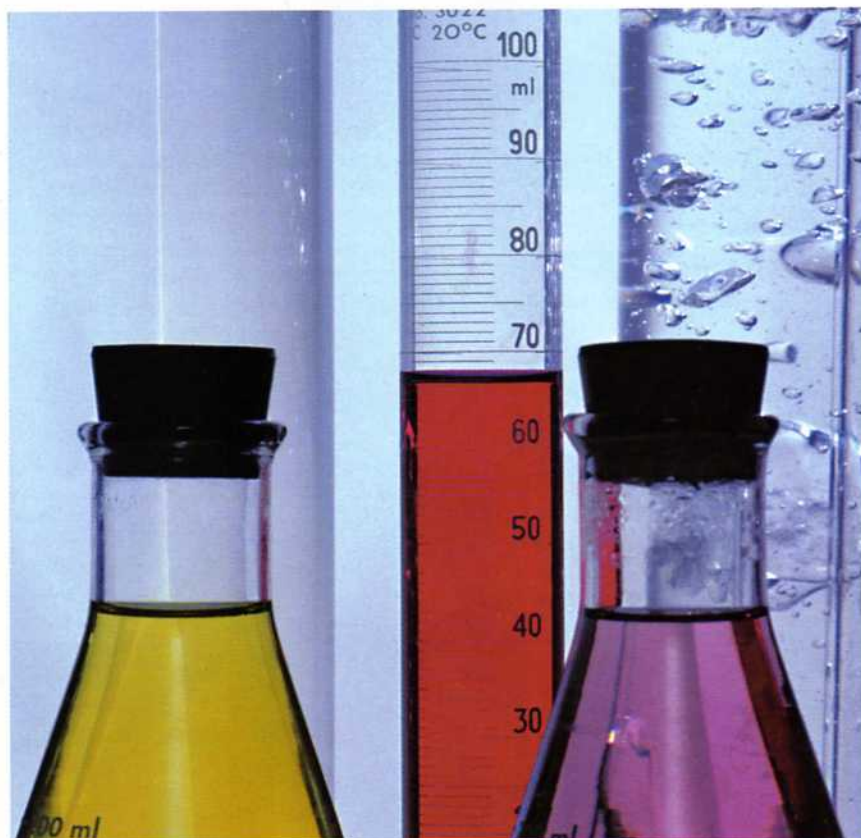

The real question in homeopathy is : does a substance that has been repeatedly diluted really work?

Especially when there is no longer any molecular quality to the remedy. After all, when you are talking about a substance at the 6X dilution, you are talking about the source substance being only 1 part per million and when you go to 24X you are talking about 1 molecule left in a liter of water. Anything above 24X is likely to have no trace of original source substance left in the entire solution. It seems all you have is water.

According to Trevor Cook, Ph.D. and President of the United Kingdom Homeopathic Medical Association, "the therapeutic action of highly dilute homeopathic remedies appears to lie in the domain of quantum physics and the emerging field of energy." A study using nuclear magnetic resonance demonstrated distinctive readings of subatomic activity in the twenty-three homeopathic remedies tested. This potency could not be found in placebos or in plain water.

The distinguished Italian, Emilio del Giudici has set forth a theory that helps explain homeopathy's therapeutic mode of action. Del Giudici proposes that water molecules form structures capable of storing minute charges of electromagnetic signals. Dr. Wolfgang Ludwig, a German biophysicist has demonstrated that homeopathic substances give off measurable electromagnetic signals. These signals show that specific frequencies are dominant in each homeopathic substance.

It is proposed that during the collision process called "succussion" the vibratory energy is exchanged between the "source substance" and the water. At room temperature, 70 percent of the water molecules are incorporated into a stable, hexagonal lattice structure, much on the order of an invisible honeycomb. This structure is capable of storing a considerable amount of vibratory energy before the structure falls apart. The storage of energy changes the structural shape. The succussion process seems to transfer the fingerprint of the source substance into the water.

The more the process of succussion is repeated, the deeper and more definite the imprint becomes.

Over the years, researchers have shown that both high and low potency homeopathic remedies show structural changes in the water they contain. These changes are not found in water or in water succussed without a source material foundation. You must also rhythmically succuss the remedy each time it is diluted. This will produce the vibratory energy transfer at every level of succussion.
